Single gas call received before fatal explosion

Prevention.

Officials said a call minutes before the blast was the only recent gas complaint.

A lone call to Con Edison some 15 minutes before an explosion leveled two East Harlem buildings Wednesday was the only warning authorities received before the fatal blast, officials said Thursday.

At least eight people died and approximately 40 people were injured during the explosion, officials said. As of Thursday night, several people were still missing.

Two buildings, at 1644 and 1646 Park Ave. near 116th Street, were destroyed after the 9:31 a.m. blast, which officials believe was sparked by a gas leak.

Though some locals reported a longtime smell of gas in the neighborhood, officials said the only recent complaint came to Con Edison at 9:13 a.m. that morning. The caller, a resident of an adjacent apartment, even admitted to smelling gas the night before but failed to alert authorities.

"Now he didn't call the night before, but he included that in the conversation when he reported the call at 9:13," Con

How to report

Officials urge New Yorkers to always report the smell of gas or electrical issues.

- Call 311
- Call Con Edison at 800-75-CONED (26633)

Edison CEO John McAvoy said during a briefing Thursday. He added that this indicates the leak "likely started well before the 9:13 call."

Con Edison received only two gas leak calls on that block, in 2013 and 2011, in the last three years. Both calls were related to internal equipment and repaired the day they were received.

The fire department also cited no 911 or 311 calls relative to a gas leak in the last 30 days at either collapsed building or in the surrounding area.

Responding to the 9:13 a.m. report on Wednesday, Con Edison crews arrived on scene after the buildings began to collapse, typical of the company's 22-minute average response time for normal calls.

"It was categorized as a low priority and it was a low priority," McAvoy said after the briefing.

If Con Edison received more than one call reporting the smell of gas, the company would have

Prevention

"If you smell gas — any hour, any day, even for five minutes — report it to Con Ed or report it to 311 so that appropriate action can be taken." de Blasio sent the complaint to the fire department rather than dispatching its own teams. Other factors that upgrade gas calls to emergency status include reports of additional problems, like flickering lights.

McAvoy said there "there's a very high likelihood" that the deadly explosion might have been prevented if Con Edison was alerted of the gas smell sooner.

Mayor Bill de Blasio and other officials urged New Yorkers to report potential gas leaks to Con Edison or the city, even if they don't think it's an emergency.

"A gas leak call is not treated as business as usual," de Blasio said.

The aftermath

Site is too dangerous for investigation

The East Harlem site where two buildings collapsed after a suspected gas leak is still too dangerous for investigators to get close to.

The National Transportation Safety Board said late Thursday that the agency has been unable to trace the source of the gas leak that may have factored into the explosion.

"Our goal for being here is to find out what happened so that no one has to go through this again," NTSB Board Member Robert Sumwalt said. "And that's our commitment."

He called the ongoing operations a rescue and recovery effort, and said that NTSB would soon develop a timeline of events based on 311 and 911 records, as well as interviews with witnesses, first responders and those injured.

As of Thursday evening, firefighters were still pouring water on the smoldering buildings and the site was not safe enough for investigators to go in.

"It's not safe for our investigators to go there," Sumwalt said. "We're not going to go in until the FDNY declares it safe."

Rescuers search for bodies on second day

Rescuers combed the rubble for bodies Thursday, one day after a deadly explosion in East Harlem brought down two buildings. Firefighters continued to tamp down smoke rising from the ruins so that investigators could get close enough to examine the wreckage and find out what caused the gas leak that led to the collapse. Preliminary investigation results released Thursday found no obvious damage to a low-pressure gas pipe under the buildings. When they can get close enough, investigators will run pressure tests on the main gas line that connects to the buildings. / AARON ADLER, METRO; GETTY IMAGES

Man faces murder charge in fatal bus crash

A 23-year-old Georgia man has been charged with second degree murder in the crash that killed an MTA bus driver last month.

Domonic Whilby, of Griffin, Ga., was allegedly driving a stolen truck on the morning of Feb. 12 when he crashed into a city bus in Greenwich Village, killing 49-year-old William Pena and injuring five others.

"Intoxicated drivers continue to plague New York," said Manhattan District Attorney Cyrus Vance in a statement.

Recovery. Mayor visits blast site as search of wreckage continues

As firefighters continued to sift through debris in the smoldering wreckage where two East Harlem buildings were leveled, Mayor Bill de Blasio returned to the site of the fatal explosion.

The mayor and other city officials were briefed Thursday morning on first responders' ongoing recovery efforts several feet from where the Park Avenue buildings collapsed, according to pool reports.

The search was described to de Blasio and City Council Speaker Melissa Mark-Viverito, whose district included the destroyed buildings. About 90 minutes before they arrived, a victim was found.

At least eight people were confirmed dead as of Thursday night after four bodies were discovered in the ruins overnight following the blast. A number of people are still missing.

De Blasio meet with first responders at the scene of the explosion. / GETTY IMAGES

"I can only imagine knowing that at any moment you might find a body, how difficult that is," de Blasio told firefighters at the scene.

The search was hindered by a sinkhole that formed when a water main broke. It's unclear whether the main break occurred before or after a gas leak, believed to be the cause of the explosion.

"These rescue operations will continue for an open-ended period of time," de Blasio said later Thursday.

A reporter informed us that as de Blasio left the site in the morning, he said to Mark-Viverito: "It is remarkable what they do."

Big screens to bring more money to MTA

Metropolitan Transportation Authority officials expect new ad revenue after placing 10 high-definition screens measuring more than 5 feet tall at multiple Midtown subway stations.

The MTA didn't respond to a request for information on how much the deal might bring to the transit authority.

Last year, the MTA earned more than $130 million in ad revenues.

The agreement with Turner Broadcasting will bring the screens to 10 subway stations in Midtown Manhattan and feature advertising for college basketball's March Madness and the company's other channels.

CULTURE

11:05 p.m.

St. Vincent

My heart has been lifted by Lucius, so it's off to the next venue to see St. Vincent. Annie Clark moves mechanically and she's dressed provocatively, but it's hard to objectify a woman who is whip-smart and badass enough to sing a line like "I prefer your love to Jesus." And with her purple-white old lady hair she defies the notion of what is conventionally sexy, which in essence is even sexier. She's also one of the most exciting guitarists alive, ripping solos that would make Prince jealous.

THE IMPORTANCE OF LUCK AT SXSW

Wednesday, March 13 diary

Follow Features Editor Pat Healy's diary as he takes you behind the scenes of SXSW.

For those who have never been to the SXSW Music Conference, it must be frustrating to watch people who talk about it get an otherworldly look in their eyes as they try to describe the appeal of the biggest music event of the year in Austin, Texas. But it is difficult to capture the electric feeling of possibility pulsing through the city, as more music fills the air than you would think there are molecules for and musicians both struggling and super-famous walk the same streets to rush to their own gigs and the gigs of other acts they're eager to see. To put it into perspective though, a first-person, hour-by-hour account of the first day of the experience should be helpful.

6:25 a.m.

I arrive at my terminal and take a seat next to Aerosmith drummer Joey Kramer. I decide not to engage because his feverish blinking indicates that he'd rather not be approached by a writer who hasn't locked down his first day of coverage. It's both nerve-wracking and exhilarating to try to find that first story upon arrival. In the past I have had luck on my side. I made it by the skin of my teeth to meet Odd Future, an hour after landing on the ground. The next year I decided not to do that scramble, and I shared a cab with Jon Langford of the Mekons, who graciously provided the interview on our way into the city.

Mid-flight I attempt to access the Wi-Fi on my phone and have success. The publicist for Warpaint wants to know if I can meet them for an interview at 12:15 on Wednesday instead of our scheduled appointment at the same time on Thursday. That would be perfect!

10:45

The airport isn't that crowded

9:59 p.m.

Casket Girls

Taking the stage with long blonde wigs, gaudy jewelry, sexy stockings and huge Jackie O shades, the lead pair of Casket Girls sing doubled melodies that sometimes veer away from each other to become harmonies. If the bass weren't so infected with fuzz, and keys so eerie, this band could be straight-up pop. The lead Girls' choreography owes a debt to Romy and Michele but as silly as it is, they don't break character. One of the Casket Girls reaches for my hand at the end of their set to help her down from the stage. I oblige. The one on stage right asks the same of me and kisses me to say thanks. The Girls are in the audience now, hugging and kissing their fans. I feel lucky I was the first.

and miraculously there is no line for a cab. "You must have been on the first flight," says the cab driver. I have been lucky! Also, getting up at 4:30 helped.

12:15 p.m.

I have a beer with Warpaint. It's only noon, but it's SXSW and it's Shiner Bock, which they don't carry in stores in the Northeast.

1:15-3:30

I write up the Warpaint story, which you read in yesterday's paper. You read that, right?

3:45-7:30

I take a pedicab to the Long Center to take in a taping of "Jimmy Kimmel Live." The line at the Long Center lives up to the name of the venue. Kimmel's guests are Robert Duvall, Rachael Ray and Damon Albarn. In addition to traditional backing, the former Blur and Gorillaz singer has a four-piece string section and a choir. The songs are sturdy compositions that would probably be more memorable after listening to the album a few times.

There's something to be said for technical difficulties. I arrive to see Lucius in the middle of one. It creates a perfect tension to be shattered by the right song, and when they play "Go Home," their harmonies are spot-on and a slide guitar brings just the right amount of menacing.

12:25 a.m.

The shows are over and I'm tired. I would go see more, but it would be hard to beat what I've just seen. I decide to go to bed. I'm a block away from the club where about five minutes later a drunk driver will crash into pedestrians and kill two people. I learn of the accident from the next morning asking if I'm OK. I have had luck on my side.

Car movie. Aaron Paul's first big movie finds him stuck in neutral

Review

'Need for Speed'

Director: Scott Waugh

Stars: Aaron Paul, Imogen Poots

Rating: PG-13

This is the only time Aaron Paul doesn't glower in the racing movie "Need for Speed." / MELINDA SUE GORDON

Video games have had an awful time of being adapted into movies, but not because they don't try. If anything, they try too hard. The plot of the 1993 "Super Mario Bros." film is so knotty it could make a PhD student's head implode, "Scanners" style. Similarly, an entire review could be eaten up explaining the convoluted mechanics required just to get "Need for Speed" going.

Based on a long-running EA game about speedy cars, Tobey (Aaron Paul) is behind the wheel, but of course that's not much of a plot. Tobey has to lose a brother, be framed for a federal crime, serve time, then be on the wrong coast where a hotly anticipated competition is taking place, which means he has to race to get to another, actual race.

There are some pretty shots of careening vehicles — but also butt-ugly ones. The director — Scott Waugh, of the army drama/recruitment film "Act of Valor" — orders digital cameras strapped to the cars to be used for extreme collision shots. The use of real cars and real stunts is appreciated, but the film lacks the bold simplicity of the classics it wants to draw from, like "Vanishing Point."

This doesn't leave much room for the performers. On "Breaking Bad" Paul only got withdrawn and quiet when he was about to blow. Here he's tasked only with recycling the moody glowering bits, plus a few anguished "NOOOOOOO!"s to the heavens. While the film drives in circles, he's stuck in neutral. MATT PRIGGE

Need for the lead

Interview. Aaron Paul of "Breaking Bad" had to learn to be a better driver for his first big starring role, in "Need for Speed."

Aaron Paul didn't quite take stuntman-turned-director Scott Waugh at his word when he first pitched the video game-inspired "Need for Speed," a fast-cars action flick made in the pre-CGI tradition of practical effects.

"I thought, 'OK, no CGI.

That doesn't necessarily mean no CGI.' I mean, they're not going to drive a car off a cliff and have it be caught by a helicopter. That's just ... they don't do that," Paul remembers. "Or they're not going to jump over four lanes of traffic. They can just do that in post [production]. But no."

That lack of a digital safety net meant Paul, fresh off finishing "Breaking Bad," had to go to stunt-driving school to learn how to pull off maneuvers like speeding toward the camera — held by Waugh — and sliding to a stop just inches from the lens. No pressure, right?

"I knew they wanted that shot even before we started shooting. I'd drive toward the camera at about 75, 80 miles an hour,

A new pace

Different pressure

Coming out of the cable TV world of "Breaking Bad," Paul says the pace of making a big-studio picture was a welcome change.

"We'd shoot an episode of 'Breaking Bad' in eight days, so your days were so long, filled with so much dialogue and action. It felt like a lot more pressure on TV," he says. "With this, Scott would come up to me and say, 'All right, it's a big day. You have two whole lines today, so I hope you have those lines ready because I'll be watching you.' And there would be a week when I would have zero dialogue, just doing the racing and driving sequences, and there would be no talking."

put it into a slide and do almost a 180 and stop within inches of the camera," Paul says. "The first take, I came about 15 feet shy, and then [Waugh] comes up to me like, 'If you hit me, don't worry. I'll just roll over the hood of the car.' Which was terrifying."

Of course, not all the flashy onscreen automotive moves belong to Paul himself. "I wanted to drive off the cliff and be caught by the helicopter, but they said that because of insurance they wouldn't allow that to happen," he offers, though he can't keep a straight face about it.

"Honestly, I did not want to do that. So yeah, I'm glad that they didn't have me do it. If we end up making [a sequel], I hope to become a better driver and do more of my own stuff."

The new driving skills Paul picked up during "Need for Speed" don't necessarily do him any favors when he's back in Los Angeles. "Even if you wanted

"But I don't know, aren't we all just used to the traffic and you just kind of zone out? I actually Philippians – God’s mental health book.

Scott Smelser will present five lectures on Paul’s letter to the church at Philippi. Attitudes, emotions, values, and priorities are subjects of this letter and these lectures. Paul explains how to deal with hardship, people, and the past and emerge as people of peace, joy, and confident hope. These lectures will help us rise above this world and, by faith, be mentally and emotionally fit.

who is David? who is Goliath?

There’s no lack of media coverage on Israel, the Middle East’s sole democracy with civil rights and a free press. What is lacking is objective coverage. This tiny Jewish nation, the size of New Jersey, with less than eight million people, a quarter of them non-Jewish, generally receives inaccurate, harsh, even hostile coverage from the world’s press.

The Jewish News Service (JNS.org) was created to correct that. Our weekly reporting, including exclusive distribution rights for Israel Hayom, Israel’s most popular daily, now appears in 31 Jewish weeklies. We invite you to join us in getting the truth out about Israel. Go to jns.org/subscribe-to-our-newsletter today.

Celebrities of stage and screen on Broadway

Stellar. You'll recognize an inordinate amount of names in this season's Playbill.

It's going to be an abnormally hot spring — on Broadway, at least. This season is so laden with stars it's practically galactic. Not only are several powerhouse thespians taking center stage, but so are a smattering of popular personalities from film and television.

Veterans of the Great

White Way include Neil Patrick Harris in the highly anticipated Broadway premiere of "Hedwig and the Angry Inch," Idina Menzel in new musical "If/Then," Sutton Foster in the formerly off-Broadway "Violet" and Alan Cumming reprising his role as Emcee in "Cabaret," for which he won a Tony Award in 1998. (Learn more about these shows and more on page 16.)

Their peers, who may be more recognizable in 2-D, take on mostly straight plays. Bryan Cranston ("Breaking Bad") leads as President Johnson in a limited engagement of "All the

Zac Braff, center right, joins the ranks in the flapper-era ensemble comedy "Bullets Over Broadway." / JASON BELL

Way." There's also Renaissance Man James Franco tackling the literary classic "Of Mice and Men." Daniel Radcliffe ("Harry Potter") is back in his big-stage element — following "Equus" and "How to Succeed in Business" — in "The Cripple of Inishmaan," a dark comedy about an Irish orphan who aims to become a movie star. And Zac Braff ("Scrubs") makes an appearance in the musical adaptation of Woody Allen's

"Bullets Over Broadway," wherein mob money is used to finance a play.

How each of these celebrities will perform in their respective vehicles is half the draw of the box office this season.

One thing's for certain: It's going to be one hell of a megawatt Tony Awards show come June.

Art world in bloom

Eye of the beholder.

Here are the five museum, gallery and festival outings you won't want to miss.

'Degenerate Art: The Attack on Modern Art in Nazi Germany 1937'

The Neue Galerie's major exhibition is devoted to the display of modern art by the Nazis in the infamous Degenerate Art exhibition of 1937. The term "degenerate" was adopted by the National Socialist regime as part of its campaign against modern art; many works were seized from museums and private collections as artists fled for safety. Expressionist masterpieces explore the traumatic psyche of the time. Through June 30 Thursday-Monday, 11 a.m.-6 p.m. Neue Galerie New York, 1048 Fifth Ave. General admission $20, www.neuegalerie.org

'Other Primary Structures' and 'Mel Bochner: Strong Language'

The 1960s makes a comeback in two shows. "Other Primary Structures" revamps the Jewish Museum's canonical 1966 exhibition of the same name to re-examine the heyday of Minimalist art through an international — versus a Eurocentric — lens. Text-based artist Mel Bochner receives a well-deserved survey showcasing his provocative dematerialized art career that launched Conceptual Art. Through Aug. 3 Thursday-Tuesday, 11 a.m.-5:45 p.m. The Jewish Museum, 1109 Fifth Ave. at 92nd St. General admission $15, www.thejewishmuseum.org

Frieze Art Fair

The 2014 Whitney Biennial is a survey of more than 100 international artists chronicling the vast contemporary art world today. Three curators from outside of the Whitney each oversee a floor of the museum, creating a fun experiment documenting different viewpoints and distinct curatorial methodologies. Keep eyes peeled for German-born, L.A.-based ceramic installation artist Sterling Ruby and Chicago-based artist Carol Jackson's surreal mixed media sculptures. Through May 25 Wednesday - Sunday, 11 a.m. - 6:00 p.m. Whitney Museum, 945 Madison Ave. General admission $20 212-570-3600 www.whitney.org

This international fair — with curated projects, tours, education programs and VIP parties — is the perfect chance to peruse world-renowned artists outside the confines of a museum. Enjoy the springtime air while embarking on an al fresco day of contemporary art. May 9-12 Friday-Monday, 11 a.m.-7 p.m. Randall's Island Park General admission $43, www.friezenewyork.com

Check out sculptures by Jeff Koons and Robert Gober in style at the Gallery Opening (May 7): Sipping Champagne while viewing million dollar artworks is as high-brow as NYC gets. Must-see

Eddie Izzard: 'Force Majeure'

Called the "Lost Python" by John Cleese, Eddie Izzard has achieved superstardom in his own right with a sharp, often absurdist, stream-of-conscious style that takes audiences on wild flights of fancy. In mid-May, Izzard brings his world-traveling "Force Majeure" show to the Beacon Theatre for a five-night run. Covering everything from the English language and "The Lord of the Rings" to dressage and the Death Star canteen, Izzard absolutely lives up to his moniker as "the greatest British stand-up comedian of his generation."

Letters

Don't appease Putin

Re: 'US should put out its own fires' (Metro, March 13) I was astonished when I read Jeremy Kohlberg's letter to the editor, saying that his "Russian friends" had "expressed hostility toward U.S. involvement" in Vladimir Putin's invasion of Ukraine. When Mr. Kohlberg speaks to his Russian friends again, he should remind them about how Stalin deliberately caused a famine in Ukraine that killed 5 to 6 million Ukrainians. And, if his Russian friends grew up under the Soviet dictatorship, he can point out that it was an American administration under President Reagan that liberated them from their oppression. The last time that America ignored an invasion was when Hitler invaded — and then annexed — Czechoslovakia. We can't just sit by and let Putin become a modern-day Hitler.

Thursday's answer

Captain Tuck moving on from Big Blue line

NFL. Two-time Super Bowl champ Justin Tuck has signed a two-year deal with Oakland.

The Giants told Justin Tuck he was free to explore free agency — and he more than took them up on their offer.

Tuck, who served as a defensive captain, has reportedly signed a two-year, $11 million deal with the Raiders on Thursday afternoon.

The 30-year-old defensive lineman was drafted by the Giants in the third round in 2005 and established himself as a force along the line no matter what position he played. Tuck was regularly shuffled back and forth between the end and inside positions — excelling at both.

The emergence of Tuck, alongside Osi Umenyiora and Michael Strahan, made the Giants one of the most feared defenses in football.

The team rode their front four to a shocking upset of the 18-0 Patriots in Super Bowl XLII. He memorably harassed Patriots quarterback Tom Brady throughout the game. He was also a key contributor on the team's next Super Bowl championship in 2011.

He had double-digit sacks in four seasons (2007, 2008, 2010, 2013) and finishes his Giants career with 60 1/2.

Tuck's production dropped in 2012, but he re-emerged last season with his best production (11 1/2 sacks) in three years.

Slowing down

The free agent signings slowed down Thursday, though a trade stole the show.

- The Eagles traded for running back/kick returner Darren Sproles. The team also signed free agent cornerback Nolan Carroll.
- Former Cowboys defensive lineman Jason Hatcher was stolen away by NFC East rival Washington for a reported four years and $27.5 million.
- In addition to Tuck, the Raiders signed former Steelers linebacker LaMarr Woodley to a two-year deal.

BREAKS IT ALL DOWN.

The ball has dropped in the NFL's Times Square, leading to dozens of front-line players changing teams in free agency.

So far, the majority of the cash has gone to linemen and defensive backs. But there have been some tell-tale moves made at skill positions, impacting the fantasy stock of many.

PT cruising

The cap-strapped Saints wanted to fit in both franchise player Jimmy Graham and stud safety Jairus Byrd. Therefore, they had to choose between Pierre Thomas and Darren Sproles. They've gone with the former — trading

A good place to look for saves are teams that win a lot. Texas would qualify, but they're going bullpen by committee.

Sproles to Philadelphia — meaning the PT Cruiser is going to be a PPR monster in 2014. The two backs combined for 148 catches last year, and recently released Lance Moore chipped in 27 more catches. Thomas has a realistic shot at 85 receptions.

Carry the load

Toby Gerhart has been Adrian Peterson's caddy for four seasons with the Vikings. Now he's getting a chance to run his own show as the Jaguars handed him a $10.5 million contract Tuesday. The problem is that Gerhart has no lateral juice or long speed and is playing for a Chad Henne-led team that projects to rarely reach the red zone. Both Jacksonville and fantasy owners will be disappointed by their return on investment.

NBA pickups

Time to scour the waiver wire for these players:

- Pero Antic, C, Hawks — The NBA rookie (but European veteran) is a sharp-shooting 7-footer who is now starting at center.
- Amar'e Stoudemire, PF, Knicks — We can accept the rest days for a guy averaging 16 points and six boards with a block as a starter.
- Matt Barnes, SF, Clippers — The injuries to Jamal Crawford and J.J. Redick aren't healing anytime soon.
